Creative Non-Fiction Writing

Nonfiction writing is about real people, places, things, and events. Readers flock to it. In fact, nonfiction is more popular than fiction. Non-fiction writing offers insights into aspects of life that people may otherwise never experience. From humor to drama, the practical to the pleasurable, personal profiles to essays on the meaning of life, non-fiction runs the gamut, the range of writing limited only to the author's curiosity and research.

In this class we'll touch upon four major forms of creative non-fiction-memoir, personal essay, feature articles, and profiles. We'll read examples of each and then create our own pieces. The only requirements are to read, write, share experiences and discover the unique voice that resides in every writer.

Mike Pemberton has a Masters in Creative Writing from Illinois State University. His short stories, essays, and excerpts from novels have appeared in such literary journals as Euphemism, Touchstone, Aethlon, Sport Literate, and Indiana Voice Journal. Mike is a former sports writer and appears on a regular basis as a columnist in the Sunday Commentary section of the Champaign News-Gazette and teaches Rhetoric 101 and 102 at Danville Area Community College.
