

History

Baccalaureate Transfer Program

Historical training is a useful enterprise. The trained historian is able to search for, analyze, and clearly convey information to others. The historian learns to explain ideas, and interpret events. As you can see, it is perfect training for today's information age. Classically, historians move into the world of education, sharing their thoughts on ideas about the past with the citizens of the future. Historians may also play a very public role in our museums and libraries, or they may move into other fields such as law and journalism.

Program Specific Courses Include:
