

Anthropology

Baccalaureate Transfer Program

Anthropology studies the human species, focusing on the whole of the human experience throughout history and world cultures. Anthropologists attempt an understanding about the human existence, answering questions such as: how did we originate, and what are changes and variations amongst people and their cultures? Subjects such as the relationship between language and thought, patterns of sexuality, marriage and family, the processes of variation and adaptation to changes, both biological and cultural, are studied.

The four fields in anthropology include:

- Cultural Anthropology
- Biological or Physical Anthropology
- Linguistics
- Archaeology

The academic anthropologist develops knowledge about these fields. The applied anthropologist uses this knowledge to identify and solve social problems.

Program Specific Courses include:

- Introduction to Anthropology
